The only thing lacking in the curriculum is the syllabus of family law and Inventory Law which can be introduced in Practical classes.

You have been constantly updating and keeping the students in the know of latest legal knowledge. Keep that up!

I would have rates poor but the worst rating you had is average. When you game the system like that it is hard to expect competence or ethical behaviour from students

The only thing lacking in the curriculum is the syllabus of family law and Inventory Law which can be introduced in Practical classes.

REPORT ON FEEDBACK ON CURRICULUM BY EMPLOYER

Majority of the employers are of the view that relevance of the courses in the curriculum of the programmes is very good, while a few are not happy with it.

Most of the employers agree that there is an adequate balance of theory and practical components in the curriculum, while a few disagree with the same.

Majority of the employers agree that the curriculum adequately prepares the students for professional/ employment avenues, while a few disagree with the same.

Majority of the employers agree that there is an emphasis on fundamental as well as latest development in law, while a few cannot say anything about it.

Majority of the employers agree that the the training, field/Jail visits as part of the curriculum offer experiential learning (practical learning)?

Most of the employers agree that the curriculum provide scope for employability, placement and entrepreneurship skills while a few do not agree with the same.

Most of the employers are of the view that the curriculum promote the culture of human values and ethics while a few disagree with the same

Most of the employers are of the view that the curriculum impart the requisite skills and knowledge for the employment while a few disagree with the same

All the employers are of the view that that there is a need to revise subject/course (theory/practical) from the present curriculum.

Majority of the employers feel that the communication skill/research aptitude of our students(s) working with them is very good while a few found it to be average.

Most of the employers feel that the family laws should be extensively dealt with in the syllabus as at present there is only a part of it in the syllabus. Eg. Inventory proceedings. So also according to them more preference should be given to professional ethics to inculcate the professional behavior and also training of students in the legal profession is also a must.
